University Update

The Board of Trustees met in Athens June 27 to approve a 1975-76 budget of $34,239,000 for the main campus, down $2.9 million from 1974-75. Although increased costs were to be absorbed as much as possible in nonpersonnel items, the reduced budget still required that a number of University positions be abolished.

Positions eliminated include 42 full-time faculty, 8 part-time faculty, 16 teaching assistants, 35 administrators and 166 classified employees. These figures do not equate with actual dismissals, however, since a number of jobs vacated during the year were not filled. Also, some of the necessary cuts are being handled by normal job attrition including retirements and resignations.

In an effort to reduce high utility costs, the University closed some buildings during summer school by consolidating classes in a few buildings. Permanent closure of some buildings is expected in the fall.

Athens Messenger publisher G. Kenner Bush recently became the third consecutive member of his family to be appointed as a University trustee. A member of the recent presidential search committee, Bush follows his father, the late Gordon K. Bush, and his grandfather, Frederick W. Bush, to the board.

Bush, 40, replaces Edwin L. Kennedy, whose term expired in May. Kennedy, a partner in the investment banking firm of Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York, had been a trustee since 1959.

In the community, Bush is a director of the Athens National Bank, a director and executive committee member of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, past director and president of the Athens Chamber of Commerce, and a past trustee of O'Bleness Memorial Hospital.

A 1956 graduate of Colgate University, Bush earned a master's degree in business administration at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration in 1960.

E. Dale Mattmiller, M.D., director of Unified Health Services, has been named acting vice president for academic services, replacing Edward M. Penson, who has been selected president of Salem State College in Massachusetts. Mattmiller joined the University's health services in 1963 and was named director in 1964. He also holds the rank of associate professor in the School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, and is the athletic team associate physician.

The University also has a new director of admissions to replace Jerry Reese, who resigned as director but remains on the staff. Dr. James C. Walters assumed the position in August, leaving his post as director of admissions and financial aids at the State University of New York at Oswego.

From the Alumni Director

It was good to meet and talk with so many of you during Alumni Weekend, especially the remarkable groups from the Classes of 1925 and 1950, and I want to share with you some of the matters discussed at the Alumni Board meetings during the weekend.

First of all, we're certain that in 1975-76 alumni in and out of Ohio will again be asked to assist with the University's recruitment efforts. Doug Voelz will be in charge of alumni participation, and he'd welcome hearing from you if you want to help.

During the year, we plan to continue developing new alumni chapters and have our sights set particularly on reactivating a chapter in Chicago, establishing one in Philadelphia and continuing to work hard in several areas in Florida. If any of you want to start a chapter or reactivate an old one, we now have a handbook on chapter organization, so write or call us for a copy.

Those of you who have gone on our alumni trips in the past know what bargains they are. For 1976 we have scheduled week-long trips to Hawaii (in February), the French Riviera (in October), and Ireland (in August), all originating in Cleveland.

To provide more personal attention, we're going to shift the 50th anniversary class reunion back to commencement weekend next June and plan a 25th anniversary class gathering during basketball season. What we've been hearing is that more and more alumni with specific ties want to get together, such as ex-band members, Post staffers, Greeks, and members of athletic teams. We'd be happy to help such groups with on-campus arrangements.

The board and I were heartened by the fact that our alumni have continued their fine record of giving to OU even during these tight times. Anyone in touch with higher education knows such assistance is necessary and you can be assured that the money is being efficiently used to support programs and activities vital to Ohio University.

Dr. Crewson Assesses the Interim Record

In reviewing his year as president of Ohio University, Dr. Harry B. Crewson assesses the record as "one I can live with" and his presidential actions as "pretty much what I intended to do."

This appraisal not only reflects a modest satisfaction with the job done but also Crewson's realistic view before assuming office of what he might accomplish in the presidency.

When he took office last Sept. 1, the job was destined to be challenging. He faced the built-in limitations of an interim appointment, a declining enrollment and an uncertain financial status.

In an address to faculty and staff in September, Crewson said: "I am quite certain that no one has a sure-fire scheme for breaking out of this circle [of uncertainty]" or solving problems "traceable to declining enrollments and consequent declines in fees and subsidy payments. The problems stemming from these quantitative facts are very real and serious and I am fully cognizant of their magnitude."

Crewson also noted the potential problems of faculty and staff morale, especially during a period of retrenchment. In forewarning the community, he encouraged patience with the sporadic efforts of different groups in which each would "maintain its own value to the whole while pointing to others as less essential."

Acknowledging the constrictions of an interim term, Crewson revealed his goals for the year in the September address. In a deliberate, low-keyed style he reviewed the strengths of the University, spoke of quality education as the University's reason for being, and reminded faculty, students and staff of the responsibilities accompanying their rights.

In keeping with his personal low key approach, Crewson chose to not hold regular press conferences or conduct a question and answer radio program. He did express willingness to meet individual reporters, and on campus, he scheduled regular meetings with representatives of different groups so that discussions regarding their areas of concern could progress.

Although he felt "nothing but admiration for the motivation and objectives involved in such efforts of openness," Crewson said he felt misuse and abuse of prior efforts had been detrimental to the University and had led to considerable misunderstanding in the listening audience.

Crewson outlined some of his objectives for the year in the September address. The most significant responsibility of the president, he said, involved "the furtherance and improvement of academic standards." Emphasis on the importance of teaching and counseling undergraduates was primary, he said, and could be achieved without detracting from graduate programs or research efforts.

On other fronts, Crewson saw the need for increased cooperation with two-year educational institutions and the development of baccalaureate degree programs which would build on the two-year technical and associate degree curriculums. Also, additional workshops, institutes and conferences were to be sought.

Although he outlined a low profile role for himself as president, Crewson assured all individuals and groups of his availability. "The concept of openness is not synonymous with, or restricted to, a particular kind of programming or format," he said. "I intend to be accessible and I want to see and talk with as many people as possible."

Now as his appointment ends, Crewson's evaluation of the year reflects his philosophy that what he could best offer the University was a steady adherence to basic commitments and a measured approach to unpredictable events.

Crewson stated his philosophy on student responsibility early in the year in a letter of "friendly straight talk" directed to freshmen and their parents. This was printed in the University edition of the Athens Messenger and sent to all new students. In it he said: "Just as you must meet certain academic standards, you must meet the standards of conduct established by the University. We will expect responsible citizenship and mature behavior."

This guideline proved to be an effective way to deal with questions raised by students regarding University policies. When a group of students disagreed with visitation hours in freshman residence halls, Crewson took the position that the hours had been stated in dorm contracts and that the regulations "will remain in effect and will be enforced." He responded to their concern by reminding them that visitation hours would be reviewed within an already ongoing evaluation of the freshman residential program.

An issue raised by a few students caused Crewson to formulate a University policy on the use of United Farm Workers and non-UFW lettuce and grapes. A University-conducted survey in the cafeterias brought forth a policy providing a choice for those eating in the cafeterias. This was consistent with Crewson's stand that the responsibility of the University was to allow individual choice but "not to declare a stand inferring a homogenous attitude by the entire community" which "is not compatible with a university's mission of free, unhindered and continuing dialogue."

When a few students tried to force the issue with a sit-in, they were warned of disciplinary action for disrupting working conditions. Those that refused to leave were arrested and disciplinary action was taken, in accordance with University regulations.

While Crewson dealt calmly with such immediate events and issues, he preferred to respond to students through thoughtful and thorough discussion and study. An example of the success of this mode of action was the establishment in March of the Lindley Hall Student Center. Creation of the center had been proposed by the Concerned Black Students and discussion of the needs for the center had been conducted in regularly scheduled meetings over several months. The implementation of the ideas was worked out cooperatively by Crewson, administrators and students.

In other areas Crewson also saw his steady persistence pay off. Planning for upper division baccalaureate programs to dovetail with programs at two-year institutions grew from one in engineering to 26 in a variety of disciplines. The most notable is a program permitting registered nurses from diploma or two-year programs to continue their education with courses tailored to their needs and leading to a B.S. degree in nursing. This option, requested by many mid-career nurses, began this summer and is funded by a variety of state and federal grants.

To encourage expansion of the workshop and conference program to utilize University facilities and resources in the summer, Crewson appointed a coordinator of special programs. Early planning, increased recruiting and new course options resulted in an 18 per cent increase in the number enrolling in credit courses this summer.

An increased retention rate in enrollment throughout the year has been cited as evidence of the effect of an intensified academic counseling effort by faculty. Recognition of student achievement was emphasized throughout the year. Reinstated was the policy of awarding the President's Scholarship Trophies to residence halls having the highest grade point averages each quarter. For the first time, the University presented awards at commencement to graduating seniors with the highest grade point average in each degree department.

In his relations with different segments of the University Crewson saw progress and favorable actions. New recognition for administrators came in revised provisions for graduate study, the consideration of administrators for emeritus status and establishment of an Outstanding Administrator Award to be awarded each quarter. Amicable negotiations with Local 1699 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees resulted in a new work agreement in the fall. And regular town-gown meetings with city officials paved the way for cooperation on an extension of Shafer Street across University property to connect West Union and Richland Avenue and provide new access to O'Bleness Hospital.

And, as promised in September, Crewson indeed made himself readily available both in his office and by accepting invitations to visit residence halls, and to speak to groups on and off campus. With his wife, Martha, he traveled to alumni meetings across the country and saw an expansion of alumni groups. At home, the Crewsons entertained steadily, welcoming to their home hundreds from the campus as well as alumni, parents and University friends.

To all he was in contact with, Crewson maintained an optimistic and confident stance. Speaking from 26 years with the University as a professor of economics, he stressed the academic reputation of Ohio University, the good and hard years previously weathered, and the idea that good will, cooperation and "a touch of faith" would help in solving current problems.

The most difficult problems of the year were in the budget area. An announced plan for consultation with a Budget Advisory Council in developing a 1975-76 operating budget was aborted. Efforts by the University's trustees and the senior administrators resulted in final legislative action which awarded special operating and debt retirement subsidies totaling $6.1 million for the 1975-77 biennium. But work on these subsidies and late decisions on final regular subsidy and fee levels put off the budgeting process until summer. Even then, changes at the state level required constant changes in University planning.

Although the financing problems were difficult and remain despite the extra subsidies awarded, Crewson administered the changing developments with evenness and patience. And since the announcement of President-designate Charles J. Ping in late April, Crewson has coordinated Ping's orientation visits to the University and consulted him on those decisions which had to be made immediately but would produce consequences with which the new president would have to live.

For a year, Harry Crewson has juggled the demands of the presidency successfully. He had planned no major changes but he has made the decisions when they had to be made. And he has done so without fanfare and after consultation and reflection. Of the year he offers what is perhaps the best summary:

"I know of no way to measure the impact of my efforts, but I have the comfortable feeling that there has occurred some turn-around in the attitude of many people toward Ohio University. While this statement might be interpreted by some as presumptuous, it is not meant to be. Many have worked toward this goal. I hope my own efforts have served to lower the voices, cool the frictions and restore a degree of tranquility. All of these I believe essential to the realization of a true and sound learning environment—our raison d'être."

at a glance . . .

Good Beginning

OU's recently established School of Nursing began offering courses this summer at sites both on and off campus. In July, good news came for the BSN degree program in the form of a $102,677 grant from the Appalachian Regional Commission.

Over 100 enrolled in a two-weekend intensive course on the legal aspects of nursing, and an equal number were expected for a course covering aspects of aging. Other courses, designed for registered nurses, were offered at hospitals and medical centers in Cambridge, Chillicothe and Marietta.

The nursing program illustrates a trend in higher education toward making courses available to students at times and places that enable them to work on baccalaureate degrees and continuing education credits while holding down jobs in their home communities.

Arts Aid

Grants awarded this spring by the Ohio Arts Council will aid three University organizations: The Ohio Valley Summer Theater received $7,000; The Ohio Review, $3,000; and the University Artist Series, $1,000. An additional $1,000 went to the Friends of the Trisolini Gallery to help establish a crafts shop at the Gallery.

Past Posties

Former editors and staff members of the Ohio University Post returned to campus in May for the annual meeting of the Post Alumni Association. Committees were appointed to handle projects involving recruitment of students, conducting on-campus journalism seminars, and helping OU journalism students find internships and permanent jobs. Officers elected were Tom Price '68, president; Andy Alexander '70, vice president; Susan Reimer '73, secretary-treasurer. Board members are Dru Riley Everts '51, Tom Hodson '70, Rudy Maxa '71, and P. J. Bednarski '74.

Malaysian Ties

Johari Hassan, academic dean for MARA Institute of Technology in Shah Alam, Malaysia, was on campus in June to discuss MARA programs staffed by Ohio University faculty.

Associations between OU and MARA have grown over the last few years to include a number of programs, including a joint bachelor of business administration degree program. An MA degree in economic education is scheduled to be inaugurated in January.

Reactivated Chapter

Ohio University graduates in eastern Kansas and western Missouri recently reactivated an alumni chapter and voted to hold three meetings per year. The chapter becomes the 34th in the University's Alumni Association.

Chosen president at the group's initial meeting was William Steinhart '50. Other officers are Larry W. Sunday '68, first vice president; Robert A. Bird '47, second vice president; Mrs. Donald H. Voelker '51, secretary; and John Carroll '39, treasurer. The chapter was last active in 1968.

Stockers Assist Students

Seven University students selected by the College of Engineering and Technology have received C. Paul and Beth K. Stocker Scholarships for the 1975-76 academic year. Awards ranged from $390 to $780.

The scholarships were established by the Stockers to help students with their education in engineering and the sciences. Stocker is a 1926 graduate of the College of Engineering and Technology and Mrs. Stocker is a 1928 graduate of the College of Arts and Sciences. A former University trustee, Stocker founded the Lorain Products Corp. and is well known as an inventor and engineer.

Graduate Teacher

On Monday evenings during spring quarter, Samuel Bonham Jr., '48, MA '49, commuted from Columbus to Athens to teach a graduate course in the organization and administration of special education for OU's College of Education.

Director of the Division of Special Education of the Ohio Department of Education, Bonham enjoys maintaining his skills as teacher and as student, saying he learns much from his students and from being at a university which is a state leader in teacher preparation. He has also been a lecturer at Ohio State University since 1969.

Outstanding Award

In late spring, Charles F. Harrington, MA '62, PhD '66, director of information systems and associate professor of education, was named the first recipient of the Ohio University Outstanding Administrator Award.

Sponsored by the Administrative Senate, the award carries with it a grant of $750 to be used by the recipient for professional growth.

During his 10 years with the University, Harrington has held a number of posts, including director of student services, director of regents reporting, director of student affairs research, counselor in the Center for Psychological Services and dean of students.

Summer in Athens

Enrollment in credit courses for the first summer term at the University was up nearly 18 per cent over last year's figures. The breakdown between graduate and undergraduate enrollment showed that 1,310 graduate students were enrolled compared to 1,173 in 1974, while undergraduate enrollment rose to 2,430 from 2,008.

The increase reflected additional students in both the regular summer offerings and in the over 170 special and short term courses added to the schedule this year.

Refugees Welcomed by University and Community

By Susan C. Frampton '72, MA '73

During those few days last May when the evening news began with coverage of the impending fall of Saigon, Ohio University's 40 Vietnamese students kept an anxious vigil before television sets. Uppermost in their minds was what would happen under the Communist regime to their families, many of whom had been employed by United States firms or our government.

For some of the students, the questions have been answered. Their families were found in refugee camps around the country and are now residing in Athens thanks to an extensive town-gown cooperative effort.

Once it became clear that a number of OU students wanted to find sponsors and bring their families to Athens, a joint committee of University staff and townspeople was formed to carry out the relocation task.

And then the offers started pouring in. Churches, individuals and civic groups wanted to help with housing, clothes, food, transportation and even English lessons.

Some of the first people who offered to sponsor Vietnamese families were faculty who had been to Vietnam in the '60s with the University's Aid for International Development Program there. Peg Felsinger, professor of curriculum and instruction and a veteran of the OU-Vietnam project, opened her home to four members of the Bui Trong Chi family.

Bui Chi was executive director of the National Wards Institute in Vietnam, a school and orphanage for children of Vietnamese soldiers killed in the war. His was one of the schools which OU staffers worked with under the AID program so he already knew some Athenians before he arrived. He also joined two sons who attended Ohio University.

Bui Chi's brother, Col. Bui Trong Huynh, also has come to Athens with his wife and six children. Col. Huynh had been a telecommunications expert in the Vietnamese Army.

Now the two men spend their afternoons painting and repairing a house on College Street owned by the Presbyterian Church which will become the permanent home of the 14 members of their two families. The Rotary Club also has donated a house for another family of 11 and the rest of the 32 Vietnamese refugees in Athens are being housed in the homes of their individual sponsors.

Those sponsors include Pat Fitch and Betty Craddock, both Ohio University staff members, plus Marguerite Appel, associate professor emeritus of education who also worked in Vietnam as part of the AID program.

Mornings for the families—adults and young children alike—are spent in English classes taught by volunteers, some of whom are in the University's Linguistics Department. Space in Ellis Hall has been furnished for the daily language instruction.

The language training is especially crucial for the 15 children of school age who will enter the Athens City Schools this fall. School officials are not only concerned with helping the children overcome their language problem but also their cultural differences—customs, diet, and school subjects, for example.

Now that some of the more immediate needs of shelter, food and clothing have been dealt with, the next big task of the joint committee will be trying to find jobs for the Vietnamese. Besides the tight job market, the obvious employment barriers to be overcome are the language difficulties some of the Vietnamese still have, and their specific skills and job experience. Two of the newest arrivals are a doctor and dentist who are expected to work towards qualifying for practice under U.S. medical standards. The others, however, may find themselves learning skills for entirely new professions.

Ohio University Placement Director Edward Beckett, who serves on the joint committee, is sending out resumes for some of the refugees, and his staff is looking into the possibilities of vocational education for those who need to learn new trades.

PHOTOS BY ELLEN GERL, MSJ '75

Money is obviously the main problem in the effort to resettle entire families of people. The joint committee's chairman and a refugee sponsor, Donald Knox, associate professor of educational administration, spent two weeks this summer in Washington, D.C., visiting all the government agencies working on refugee relief to gather information on what kinds of help are available.

Knox, who was chief of party with the OU-Vietnam project for four years, found that the government intends for the bulk of refugee support to come from sponsors so that little federal assistance will be necessary.

It has become possible, however, for Vietnamese college students in the U.S. to apply for government loans, thus permitting many of them to continue with their educations. And the government has released some funds to retrain the many Vietnamese doctors who came in the refugee groups.

There are still a number of refugees who want to join relatives attending Ohio University, according to information received by the OU foreign student advisor, William Frederick. This indicates that the joint town-gown committee will be a continuing effort for at least the next few months.

ALUMNI WEEKEND

Dr. Konneker presides at the luncheon.

The Alumni Board of Directors makes plans for the coming year.

Thirty-eight members of the Class of 1925, shown on the cover, returned to campus for their Golden Anniversary celebration in June. They joined members of the 25th anniversary Class of 1950 and other alumni—more than 200 in all—for a weekend of getting reacquainted with old friends, with their alma mater and with Athens and Southeastern Ohio.

Highlight of the weekend was the Saturday luncheon at which Alumni Association president Dr. Wilfred R. Konneker awarded certificates of appreciation to President and Mrs. Harry B. Crewson for their contributions to the entire University and to the strengthening of campus ties with alumni.

Speakers for the occasion were Edward Jennings, 1925 class vice president, and Milton J. Taylor, 1950 class president and current University trustee. A special program followed, with William Steinhardt '50 discussing his experiences as one of the first Americans to visit the Peoples Republic of China. Accompanying a delegation of U.S. physicians and surgeons, Steinhardt witnessed surgery using acupuncture anesthesia.

In business sessions conducted during the weekend, the Alumni Board of Directors thanked outgoing members Richard H. Brown '68, William Hill '63, Roger Scott, '52, and Alan Weinberg '64. Newly elected as directors were Robert P. Axline, Jr. '57, James E. Betts '54, L. Dale Springer '49 and Arthur W. Steller '69.

1975 Bobcat Football

By Frank Morgan

A solid and experienced offensive and defensive line, plus improved passing and depth in the offensive backfield, appear to be the strong suits Coach Bill Hess will have at his command in his 18th season.

Lilienthal

Rick Lilienthal, a former high school quarterback and a reserve one at OU while he started at end, won the job with an impressive spring.

"Lilienthal had an excellent spring practice. It was surprising, and pleasantly so, to see him make the adjustment so quickly. He was recruited as a quarterback and played there as a freshman, and we tried to keep him ready in case of injuries on the road," Coach Hess said.

In the backfield are four running backs close in ability. Neil Carlson finished just in front of Chuck Barrington at fullback, and at tailback Arnold Welcher and Dave Houseton were just about a photo finish. This is the best depth Ohio has enjoyed at this spot in some years.

Ohio's punting is in the solid hands of Dave Green and Vetter, while the placekicking is in the experienced hands of three-year letterman Gary Homer.

Up front are the veteran combinations of Jeff Pisching and Tim Pounders at center; guards co-captain Ed Madison, Dave Miller and Joe Kopec; and tackles Bob Barrow and Jim Bollman. Receivers are Green, newcomer Phil Buckner and veteran Kenny Woodson. Backing up Bollman and Barrow are sophomores Kevin Kahl and Tom Kauffman.

Defensively the picture is brighter than in the past few years, with Ted Librizzi and Rod Day at the tackles and Bob Willis and Mike DeLuca the middle guards. Ends will be co-captain Wally Sonnie and Steve Miller, plus Bill Chaney. Ohio's linebackers return in Roger Koepfle and Bill O'Hara, backed up by Greg Lockett.

In the secondary, Lyle Govert will be at safety, with Joe "Buddy" Mohler at wide-side corner. Wide-side half-back will be John Summers and short-side halfback, Chuck Taylor. Doug Kaylor and Mark Thomas will provide some depth here, and the 22 incoming freshmen will be scanned for additional help.

The schedule again is difficult, but not as much so perhaps as has been true in recent years. The Bobcats will open Sept. 13 at Central Michigan (national college division champions last year), followed by Ball State and Kent State here, making three league games in a row.

The Bobcats will spend October on the road at Minnesota, William and Mary, Miami and Toledo, returning for a Homecoming game against Western Michigan and contests with Bowling Green and Cincinnati. Ohio finishes regular season play at Marshall Nov. 22.

Alumni Coaches

Two former Ohio University football players, Ron Curtis '66, MED '71, and Greg Hull '72, have joined Coach Bill Hess's staff as assistant coaches.

Curtis, who won three letters in football and also served as team captain, will handle the defensive secondary for Ohio.

He left an assistant post at Massillon Washington High School to rejoin his college coach.

Hull is an Athens native who lettered three years as a tight end for Hess teams in 1969-71. He returned to campus last fall and served as a graduate assistant in the Bobcat football program.

A nephew of Bob Wren, former Bobcat baseball coach, Hull will work with the wide receivers.

Track Prospects

Track and cross country coach Larry Clinton has signed nine outstanding prospects in his effort to rebuild Ohio track fortunes.

Eric Wagner, a 6'9" high jumper from Sheffield Lake won runnerup honors in the state.

Steve Johnson, Kettering, was also runnerup in the pole vault in Ohio high school AAA competition with a vault of 14 feet 6 inches.

Lantz Gregory Fuqua, Mansfield, has a best of 48.8 in the 440 and 10 flat in the 100. He finished fourth in AAA Ohio competition.

Lonnie Phifer, Youngstown, was Ohio high school AA 100-yard dash champ with a :09.8 clocking. Vince Yantko, of New Salem, Pa., is a potential 200-foot javelin thrower with a high school best of 196'3".

Charles Dempwolf, a 6'4½" Cincinnati Greenhills graduate, is a field events specialist in shotput and discus and also runs the hurdles.

Tom Holdsworth, from Wayne, N.J., is a distance runner who also competes in cross country as well as track. He was All-County 880 twice, All-County cross country once, and he captained his team twice.

Mark Shonebarger, Lancaster, is also a distance runner and hopes to compete in the Boston Marathon one day.

Larry Moran, Canton, is another distance man and placed third in cross country in the state meet. He has a mile of 4:20.4 and a half mile of 2:00.7, plus a two mile of 9:32.0, a 9:36.0 cross country and a 12:12 for the 2½ mile.
